"Jimmy, Jimmy dear. Come out of the bathroom."

"No, sank you."

"Please, dear. Come on out."

"No, sank you."

"Jimmy, come out of that bathroom at once! Do you hear me?"

"You hear me?" said Jimmy. "You hear me? You hear me?"

"You don't want to be a bad boy, do you? Open the door, darling."

"Jimmy bad-boy. Oh, bad-boy!" (giggling)

"Honey, don't you want some candy?"

"Want candy, mawther."

"Well, then, open the door and come and get it." (Pause) "Mawther,--Jimmy want candy."

"Then open the door, dear."

(Another pause) "Mawther—You open door."

"Now listen to me, Jimmy. You locked the door. You can open it."

There was a barrage of kicks and blows on the bathroom door.

"Bad-boy mawther! I want candy. Open the door. Bad-boy mawther!"

Why, that's wonderful, his mother thought. That's really remarkable. Three sentences in a row, all connected by a sequence of thought.
