ENTHUSIASTIC DIETER:

Ooooooh, just look at all that wonderful pastry. Ummmmm! Doesn't it look just delicious? I promised myself that I would stick to my diet, no matter what! I said to myself, "Now, Helen, don't you dare walk into that bakery and buy something fattening." But one whiff of that appetizing smell, and I was sunk. I'm going to buy just one teeny, tiny cupcake, without much frosting, and that's it. How much is that one little plain cupcake in the corner? Oh my, but it is small isn't it? But that's about all I should have. You know, Mazie and I were just saying over the bridge table that we absolutely must stick to our diets-- and we both promised we'd try ever so hard. I just couldn't face Mazie if I didn't keep my promise. So I'll just take that little cupcake. Ooooooh, look at that gorgeous, big German chocolate cake, oozing with the coconuttiest, gooiest frosting I've ever seen! Oh, how can I resist such a beautiful creation? No, I just mustn't buy it. What would Mazie say? I've just got to have will power. I'll have that little cupcake and nothing else.--Ummmmm. I can hardly wait to call Mazie.
