Kate and Amanda tiptoe downstairs. They want to do something nice for their mom, but the method and the results are not what anyone expected.

KATE: Do you think she'll stay in bed?

AMANDA: She's sleeping like a baby.

KATE: That's because the baby kept her up most of the night. (They both consider something nice they could do for their mother.)

KATE: I know! Let's fix her breakfast in bed!

AMANDA: Have you ever cooked before?

KATE: I fix my own breakfast everyday.

AMANDA: Corn pops and juice is not really cooking.

KATE: I suppose Pop Tarts and chocolate milk test all of your skills.

AMANDA: (Very proudly) I fixed sausage and biscuits the other day all by myself.

KATE: Oh, wow. Out of the wrapper, into the microwave. Look! It's Julia Child!

AMANDA: I saw you accidentally pour juice on your cereal the other day.

KATE: (Recovering quickly) I meant to do that. Kooky Carson said it would taste great.

AMANDA: (Shrugging) Okay, if you say so. What should we fix?

KATE: Mom likes boring stuff for breakfast. She's not into chocolate chip and peanut butter pancakes.

AMANDA: Let's fix her an omelet, some bacon, and some biscuits.
