(Two girls sit side by side in their chairs. They hold their arms straight out in front of them, their hands in fists like they are holding a safety bar on a carnival ride. They lean back, getting nervous. Then they lean far forward and scream. They lean back again and after a count of five, they suddenly sit up straight.)

JESSIE: What's wrong? Why are we stopped?

ANGIE: I don't know. (Peers down) Hey! Start the ride!

JESSIE: What did they say?

ANGIE: Something about this ride never working again.

JESSIE: What?! They can't just leave us up here.

ANGIE: (Leaning forward and calling) What do they think?

JESSIE: What? What?

ANGIE: (Straightening) They're sending in cherry picker baskets to take us down.

JESSIE: No! I can't do that! I'm terrified of heights! We're all going to die!

ANGIE: No we're not. Get a hold of yourself.

JESSIE: Then why did an ambulance just pull up?

ANGIE: We're all going to die!

(They grip each other in fear. Finally, Jessie let's go.)

JESSIE: Angie, you're my best friend in the whole world.

ANGIE: Jess, I love you like a sister.

JESSIE: And since we may only have minutes to live, I have to tell you something.
