Korey has just graduated from College and could probably work anywhere he wants, but he picks a gossip newspaper that possibly thinks Elvis is still alive and running a Steak-n-Shake in Houston, Texas.

MR. MATTHEWS: (Shaking hands) How do you do? Sit down. You are here to interview for the job of writer for this paper?

KOREY: That's right. I just graduated from journalism school and I feel I can do a good job.

MR. M.: You're familiar with our newspaper, right? The Nose? (Stands, states the motto Proudly) 'We are always sniffing out news.'

KOREY: Yes sir. I think it's an outstanding publication.

MR. M.: (In an aside). He probably thinks wrestling is real too.

KOREY: Excuse me?

MR. M.: Oh, nothing, nothing. Now, what makes you think you are qualified for this job?

KOREY: Well, sir, I think I saw a UFO one night right outside of town.

MR. M.: Yes, well, hmmm. Anything else?

KOREY: My grandmother always told the story of a boy she grew up with being part horse.

MR. M.: Hmmm. What part?

KOREY: Excuse me?

MR. M.: Nothing. Any other reason you feel qualified?

KOREY: (Looking around like someone might be listening) I truly feel, sir, that it is my mission in life to find Elvis and tell him it's okay to come home.
